This is an excellent opportunity for anyone that has not previously had the opportunity to see this Indian Bollywood/Hindi film, or any other Hindi film in general. I've always been a fan of Bollywood films, and I find them to be very entertaining. When it comes to watching Hindi films, there is one especially that comes to mind. If you're familiar with the film Omkara then you will know that this is an action and drama movie and revolves around Jagga (Katrina Kaif), a South Indian girl who lives in Punjab and works as a security guard in the Punjab Regiment. Jagga's father (played by Amitabh Bachchan) was once a General for India's Army, but now he is no longer involved with the Army because he has been disowned by his son for pushing him out of the Army because of his Alzheimer's disease. Jagga's mother (played by Rani Mukherji) is a former music teacher from India, but now she no longer remembers who her own children are. Jagga is excited to have been given the honor of being a part of a mission to rescue a kidnapped Indian soldier named Raja (played by Nawazuddin Siddiqui) so that he can prove himself as a hero and earn his father's respect back. Some say the movie might not be technically perfect but it is good enough for you to keep watching because it has great acting, an engaging story line and emotional scenes.
